PulsePoint Experience — CA-Woodland Hills

Workplace experience report card · completed responses

66

Overall PulsePoint Experience Index Score 66 / 100 · Bottom third of sites (-3 vs avg)

Rank 10 of 10 · Bottom third of sites · sites range 66–77

392 of 2,928 respondents (this site vs. all 10 sites) · 626 written comments

DIMENSION SCORES (0–100)

Work Activity	Physical	Services	Technology
56 #10/10	64 #9/10	73 #9/10	71 #7/10

The Index Score is the average of the four Dimension Scores (0–100) — the same calculation as the Tableau deck. Boxes show each dimension's score and its rank among the 10 sites. Tier = thirds of the 10-site distribution. (+/–) = vs. the company average.

Importance vs. Support gaps

Dimension	Importance	Support	Gap	Status
Work Activity	3.2	3.2	+0.1	On track
Physical Feature	3.5	3.5	+0.0	On track
Service Level	3.5	3.9	+0.4	On track
Digital & Tech	—	3.8	—	Moderate

Status: red = Needs attention · green = On track · orange = Exceeds needs. Digital & Tech is agreement-only, rated on the 1–5 agreement level (Strong ≥4.0 / Moderate 3.5–3.9 / Needs attention <3.5).

Detail — by question (Gap = Support – Importance)

Dimension topic (question)	Imp	Sup	Gap	Status
Work Activity
Planned in-person meetings at a PulsePoint	2.0	3.6	+1.6	Exceeds needs
Informal or spontaneous collaboration with colleagues	2.5	3.3	+0.8	On track
Working with others on shared tasks or problem-solving	2.8	3.2	+0.4	On track
Learning, training, or skill development	3.1	3.2	+0.1	On track
Virtual collaboration with remote or hybrid colleagues	3.8	3.4	-0.4	Needs attention
Tasks requiring discretion	3.7	3.0	-0.7	Needs attention
Focused individual work that requires concentration and mini	4.2	3.0	-1.3	Needs attention
Physical Feature
Availability of community spaces (i.e. gathering, event spac	2.6	3.8	+1.3	On track
Availability of meeting and collaboration spaces (individual	3.0	3.7	+0.6	On track
Availability of spaces that support personal wellbeing or re	3.1	3.6	+0.6	On track
Ease of navigating and finding spaces (directions and signag	3.5	3.7	+0.2	On track
Lighting comfort (natural and artificial)	3.7	3.7	+0.0	On track
Furniture comfort and ergonomics (including adjustability of	3.9	3.7	-0.3	Needs attention
Thermal / temperature comfort	3.9	3.5	-0.4	Needs attention
Availability of spaces that support discretion	4.0	3.2	-0.8	Needs attention

Availability of spaces that support focused work	4.2	3.2	-1.1	Needs attention
Service Level
Entry and reception	2.9	4.3	+1.4	On track
Support from a community manager	2.9	3.8	+0.9	On track
Access to workplace support services that support daily need	3.0	3.5	+0.5	On track
Availability of on-site food and beverage options	3.0	3.3	+0.3	On track
Cleanliness and upkeep of PulsePoint	4.1	4.2	+0.2	On track
Ability to get help resolving workplace or technology issues	4.0	4.1	+0.1	On track
Reliability of building operations (e.g., elevators, restroo	4.2	4.2	+0.1	On track
Communication about workplace updates, changes, or disruptio	3.8	3.9	+0.1	On track
Digital & Tech
Reservation tools are easy to use	—	4.0	—	Moderate
Digital collaboration tools (e.g., Microsoft tools) support	—	4.0	—	Moderate
I can connect and start working at a PulsePoint without unne	—	3.9	—	Moderate
Workplace-provided hardware (e.g., monitors, keyboards, mice	—	3.8	—	Moderate
Technical issues that affect my ability to work are resolved	—	3.8	—	Moderate
Video conferencing and meeting room technology reliably supp	—	3.6	—	Moderate

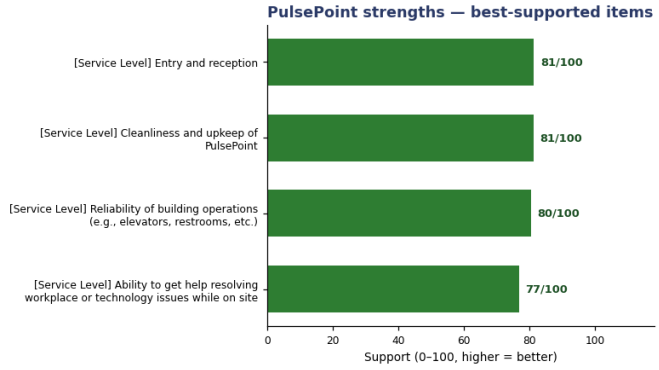

Associate Sentiment Score

The survey's summary sentiment items, one per dimension (Q8/Q12/Q16/Q19, 1–5; Q16 = Services, Q19 = Technology by survey position). “Company” = the other in-scope sites; “vs company” is a Welch t-test (significant at p<0.05).

Dimension	Summary sentiment question	Site	Company	vs company
Work Activity	“My workplace enables me to work productively” (Q8)	3.10	3.34	below company (significant)
Physical space	“I feel comfortable and safe while working at the PulsePoint” (Q12)	3.79	3.96	below company (significant)
Services	Overall ease of using the PulsePoint — Services (Q16)	3.74	3.93	below company (significant)
Technology	Overall ease of using the PulsePoint — Technology (Q19)	3.71	3.85	below company (significant)
Overall	Average of the four items	3.59	3.77	below company (significant), p=0.00

Friction & strength themes

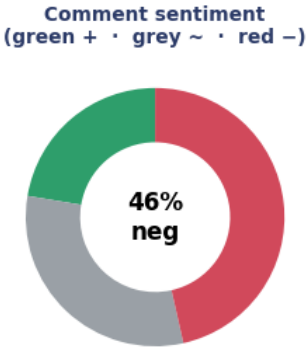

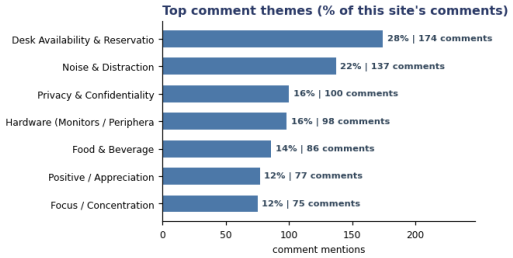

Open-ended comment themes

Comment sentiment: 22% positive · 31% neutral · 46% negative

Top area to address: Focused / Private Work.

Top priorities to address

Category	# comments	% neg	priority
Focused / Private Work	211	61%	79
Physical Environment	260	48%	71
Technology	181	53%	56
Policy / Experience	141	29%	40
Amenities & Services	150	30%	40

In their words — what to fix

"Often cords or mouses are missing from desks and I do not know who to contact"

— Director or Manager, More than 10 years · Desk Availability & Reservations · represents ~92 similar

"Working at a pulse point is challenging due to potential missing items and high noise levels."

— Associate, More than 10 years · Noise & Distraction · represents ~93 similar

"even with designated manager/director space, there is still minimal privacy and sensitive conversations require you to get up and move to a privacy booth which is inconvenient and disruptive."

— Director or Manager, More than 10 years · Privacy & Confidentiality · represents ~55 similar

"Sometimes, find issues of a monitor not working due to settings being changed at times."

— Associate, 2 to 5 years · Hardware (Monitors / Peripherals) · represents ~58 similar

How comments are categorized: themes are assigned by a transparent keyword taxonomy built for this survey (28 themes across 7 categories), kept separate from the PXIP category set by design so the open-ended read stands on its own.

Demographics — respondent profile

Demographics are provided to help readers understand the respondent mix behind the results.

Role	#	%
Associate	270	69%
Director or Manager	120	31%
Staff VP	2	1%

Tenure	#	%
More than 10 years	311	79%
6 to 10 years	41	10%
2 to 5 years	31	8%
6 mos to 24 mos.	8	2%
Less than 6 mos.	1	0%

Hybrid category	#	%
Hybrid 1 - 1-2 Days/We	255	65%
Hybrid 2 - 3-4 Days/We	124	32%
Onsite - 5 Days/Week O	10	3%
I don't know	3	1%

Appendix — Comments by category & sentiment

Up to 8 comments per category/sentiment shown here to keep the report shareable. The complete log of all 626 comments is in the HTML report (expandable) and the per-site verbatim CSV export.

Focused / Private Work (210 total)

NEGATIVE · 127 (+119 more in HTML/CSV)

- Data exploration and data mining. For these you will sometimes need to be knee deep in the data without interruption. When you disconnect you lose all your data which is burdensome when having travel. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- Working at a pulse point is challenging due to potential missing items and high noise levels. — Associate, More than 10 years
- My work needs lot of focus on what I am doing at any point of time and there are always distractions at the PulsePoint location. This whole concept has introduced lot of inefficiency for me. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- It can get a little noisy in there. The glass telephone booth stations need to have monitors and outlets to allow us to join meetings in there. — Associate, More than 10 years
- Phone booths would be more helpful if there were two monitors within. I project manage and require two screens for this purpose during meetings. I'm in meetings for most of my work day and entirely with people outside of my PulsePoint, thus I find myself to be a distraction to others around me. In addition, when I have a meeting that requires discretion, I'm forced into a phone booth, as the meeting rooms around me are already booked. I have not found an appropriate headset that will allow me to block sound from others to concentrate while also allowing me to speak clearly for others to hear me. The ones I've tried give me migraines. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- As a people leader director, most of my day I have meetings that require discretion. I have 1 on 1s, HR related discussions that should not be held at a workstation. Sometimes privacy cubes are not available. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- The PulsePoint cannot support a virtual team with people all across the country, nor people that require focused individual tasks and concentration. The level of interruption due to constant chatter, lack of respect for others due to people shouting very loudly on calls, all around constant chatter around the office and breakrooms, noise, illusive task of finding quiet desks, along with the admin task of requesting desks and deep cleaning upon arrival to desk every week is disruptive and time consuming. When people are on conference calls, everyone around them can hear everything causing loss of concentration to individual's work. Then when one is on conference calls, the group can hear everything and everyone talking, chatting in the background. — Associate, More than 10 years
- More privacy options for associates who are on call most of their day. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 54 (+46 more in HTML/CSV)

- You lump all manager/ director titles as though they do the same work. There are people with 'manager/ director' in their title, but have no direct reports. Directors that are people leaders and that are also engaged in 8-10 hours worth of back to back meetings, need an office to support the privacy of their discussion and the fact that the demand and expectation is to be on back to back calls with no breaks, meaning no opportunity to move from space to space. Definitely makes zero sense to sit in a phone booth for 8 hours daily. The set up does not allow what is needed for people leaders to be able to have private and confidential conversations, unless the book space for a short allowance of time. Makes zero sense why Directors of people cannot have an office for a day or book in advance. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- The PulsePoint is fine but when you try to collaborate with a coworker at your desk, people look at you like you are making noise which is uncomfortable. I prefer to call my coworker while I am working from home so I can freely talk and discuss the legal case I am working on. Also, the office can be loud and it is harder to concentrate. — Associate, More than 10 years
- Some days I have many phone calls and my personality will not allow me to talk loudly in the bullpen, so I always go into a call box, which is not a comfortable place to be 6 hours out of the day. I try to schedule my calls and presentations (so I have 2 monitors) for days where I am working from home and schedule my focus time for the office, which works far better. The commute also takes away my ability to get online as early to collaborate with my East Coast partners as I am on the West Coast. Prior to COVID we had an office in Thousand Oaks which was a stones throw from my home, if we reopened some of our old offices I think there would be a lot more people reacting positively to return to office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- Director equivalents and Directors are currently limited to reserving an office for only two hours per day and can book rooms only on the same day. This limitation reduces effectiveness for roles that involve back■to■back virtual meetings requiring sustained focus.Allowing greater flexibility (3-4 hours) such as longer-duration reservations or advance room booking would improve productivity, enable more effective participation in virtual meetings, and reduce disruption to others in open or shared workspaces. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years
- I do believe there needs to be more options to allow focused work and discretion. On busy days in the office, the pods are usually occupied, as well as the smaller meeting rooms. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- Meetings, scheduled all day long back to back in 30 minute increments that require use of a phone booth or other location not at the cubicle with double monitors. Working from a laptop endlessly in a phone booth is not peak productivity. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years
- I appreciate the open floor plans, however, for those that are required to come in, and only have virtual meetings, all workstations are useless for privacy or the ability to talk out loud. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• There are not enough offices to support a focused and discretionary day at the office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

POSITIVE · 29 (+21 more in HTML/CSV)

• Focused individual work — Associate, More than 10 years

• Reservations: If you're not going to use your reservation, please cancel it as soon as you know so others can book the desk. Meetings: If you're hosting a meeting or having an extended discussion, please use a booth or meeting room rather than talking at your desk. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I am on calls (meetings) 85-90% of my day. There are not a lot of areas to sit when talking that much. I've been in a huddle room with my boss, and we were on the same call (meeting). the door was touching but not closed all the way and someone came up and closed it completely. I know it can be bothersome when someone talks a lot. When in cubes trying to work and people come down the aisle and are talking or even stop and talk that is sometimes hard to deal with. Especially when your very focused and trying to concentrate. I work with member data and often have PHI up on my screen, so I have to be very careful of what can be seen. I do love the phone booths, but I don't want to spend the whole day in there. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I have always been a virtual before the hybrid directives and both in office and at home is equally productive since my team is spread out and there are not many colleagues to connect with in office. I end up working in an office or booth alone like I would at home. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Quiet spaces to be in virtual meetings with dual screens. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Please create certain quiet areas for people who don't have any calls during the work day. So they can focus better. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Availability of space to support focused work. I have tight deadlines and the office surroundings are are extremely distractive. I work on HEDIS interventions and getting accurate member data to vendors is extremely important. Large group of people all on the same teams meetings in the common work area. People walking around the office on conference calls. Availability of spaces that support discretion. Having to reset my work environment when I'm in the office to support my computer layout Does not have ergonomic keyboards which is a must for me. Desk and keyboards have food left behind on them. I choose to work off my laptop which is not the most productive when you working with large datasets. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I am most productive working in a quiet space and find that sitting in the open work desks are highly distracting with the conversations of others. I primarily book VP rooms to ensure high productivity, but they are limited in the duration they can be booked and in how many there are. It would be great to have more, smaller, VP style rooms for those who require quiet spaces. Also, the VP rooms often get warm and there isnt an ability to modify the air settings. A fan in each of these rooms would be helpful. — Associate, More than 10 years

Collaboration & Meetings (86 total)

NEGATIVE · 36 (+28 more in HTML/CSV)

• Phone booths would be more helpful if there were two monitors within. I project manage and require two screens for this purpose during meetings. I'm in meetings for most of my work day and entirely with people outside of my PulsePoint, thus I find myself to be a distraction to others around me. In addition, when I have a meeting that requires discretion, I'm forced into a phone booth, as the meeting rooms around me are already booked. I have not found an appropriate headset that will allow me to block sound from others to concentrate while also allowing me to speak clearly for others to hear me. The ones I've tried give me migraines. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• There needs to be a separation between people who are working on calls and meetings all day and people like me who do not have calls and meetings all day. It gets pretty noisy at times when teams come in to collaborate- esp if sales or customer services or project management. It is hard to concentrate and can be distracting. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I've been W@H associate since 2012. Mandating associates come into the office is a ridiculous and unnecessary policy. I totally understand the need at times when team(s) want to connect in person. It shouldn't be a mandate that HR has to track who is on the 'naughty' list. My immediate team members all live in different states. 90% of the colleagues I work with on a regular basis also reside in other offices. For associates who come into the office 3 days/week, when oil and gas prices are at all-time high, very short-sited. Associates don't need more activities in the office, we need the flex to decide on our own and with our own managers if we need to be on-site. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Collaboration within your department, not have associates go who do not have teams at pulse point, and just wasting time. — Director or Manager, 6 to 10 years

• working the office you say come in and collaborate but if there is no one there to do so why push it. Then you indicate to collaborate then people around look at you that your talking when you should not be. no matter where I sit on the 3rd floor or 2nd its the same issue. I cant take my meeting all day the in the phone booth and when I am on calls I am loud so how do you fix this?????? — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• As a people leader with back to back confidential virtual meetings daily I am not supported by my pulse point. I am limited to only 2 hours of a meeting room or Staff VP office, and it is not sustainable or ergonomic to work in n a telephone booth for the entire day. I don't even bother booking desks anymore because it is disruptive to my daily schedule. There is also lack of consistency in director workspaces and equipment (ex webcams). — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I believe all are captured but the desks as set up today do not support working at them if quiet or concentration is required. Any collaboration or phone calls have to be taken from a call booth because the noise level doesn't support working at your desk for these activities. — Director or Manager, 6 to 10 years

• Lack of office, capsule, meeting rooms for client virtual meetings. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 29 (+21 more in HTML/CSV)

• For my role, having an office/cubicle that has a monitor and camera would be extremely helpful. I often have client meetings and scramble to get an area to accommodate my needs. At times all the huddle rooms, office and cubicle rooms are taken. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• The PulsePoint is fine but when you try to collaborate with a coworker at your desk, people look at you like you are making noise which is uncomfortable. I prefer to call my coworker while I am working from home so I can freely talk and discuss the legal case I am working on. Also, the office can be loud and it is harder to concentrate. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Some days I have many phone calls and my personality will not allow me to talk loudly in the bullpen, so I always go into a call box, which is not a comfortable place to be 6 hours out of the day. I try to schedule my calls and presentations (so I have 2 monitors) for days where I am working from home and schedule my focus time for the office, which works far better. The commute also takes away my ability to get online as early to collaborate with my East Coast partners as I am on the West Coast. Prior to COVID we had an office in Thousand Oaks which was a stones throw from my home, if we reopened some of our old offices I think there would be a lot more people reacting positively to return to office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I do believe there needs to be more options to allow focused work and discretion. On busy days in the office, the pods are usually occupied, as well as the smaller meeting rooms. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Not really. If I have a call that I need to have a quiet environment, I will go into an open conference/huddle room or telephone booth. I have not had any issues with this so far. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The associates within my team work across all California, therefore, we are not able to meet at the same Pulse Point for meetings or collaboration. — Associate, More than 10 years

• PulsePoint could better support employees by providing more flexible ergonomic workspace options. For some employees, standard workstations do not adequately accommodate individual ergonomic needs, yet current support options are limited for those who are only in the office part-time. Access to adjustable workstations (such as sit-stand desks (not the desk top type), higher-range chairs, or designated ergonomic workspaces) within team collaboration areas would help employees work comfortably while still participating in the in-person collaboration that is one of the primary reasons for coming into the office. Balancing ergonomic needs with proximity to teammates is an important aspect of workplace support that is not always addressed by the current workspace setup. — Associate, More than 10 years

• More small conference rooms and work capsules are needed to support heavy on-site meeting and call demands. Directors are on-site three days per week and are in calls most of the day, which can still be disruptive in open areas. Leaders need capsules (not phone booths) and small rooms for 2+ hours daily for team and cross-functional collaboration. Supporting the Health Plan President is challenging due to limited offices with tables/chairs - only 255-B corner office has this setup - it would be nice to add it to all Staff VP offices. Large CA Health Plan meetings (3/month, 14–25 attendees) often face space constraints more large-room options are needed beyond the single 1st-floor room. — Associate, 2 to 5 years

POSITIVE · 21 (+13 more in HTML/CSV)

• Reservations: If you’re not going to use your reservation, please cancel it as soon as you know so others can book the desk. Meetings: If you’re hosting a meeting or having an extended discussion, please use a booth or meeting room rather than talking at your desk. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I am on calls (meetings) 85-90% of my day. There are not a lot of areas to sit when talking that much. I've been in a huddle room with my boss, and we were on the same call (meeting). the door was touching but not closed all the way and someone came up and closed it completely. I know it can be bothersome when someone talks a lot. When in cubes trying to work and people come down the aisle and are talking or even stop and talk that is sometimes hard to deal with. Especially when your very focused and trying to concentrate. I work with member data and often have PHI up on my screen, so I have to be very careful of what can be seen. I do love the phone booths, but I don't want to spend the whole day in there. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Not really as my work is collaboration with remote colleagues and not something that can be better supported by my PulsePoint. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Since most of my colleagues are spread out across the country, and the few VPs that impact at work are all ensconced in their dedicated offices when they are in the PulsePoint, I still am not interacting/collaborating with colleagues in person, yet my role is Hybrid 2. I sit among a pool of Customer Service and finance staff. While they are very nice, I can't 'collaborate' with them for work. the 23-mile drive in and back in L.A. traffic just adds to extra time in my day and now very expensive gas prices. Whatever benefits I can get from reporting in at a Pulse site can be met in just 1 day per week or as there are team meetings when everyone comes in on the same day. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I like having pods or meeting rooms to go into when I need it, I enjoy the snack area as well — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• The lights are way too bright and the office is too warm. I book a conference room that you can turn the lights down as bright lights hurt my eyes. It's too warm for me as I have an Auto Immune Disease and staying cool is critical to my health. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Need more larger, quiet, comfortable spaces for deep focus and productivity. Phone booth-type spaces are too small, conference rooms too big, offices in use by managers. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Availability of spaces that support focused work and individual collaboration spaces. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

Physical Environment (258 total)

NEGATIVE · 127 (+119 more in HTML/CSV)

• As a people leader director, most of my day I have meetings that require discretion. I have 1 on 1s, HR related discussions that should not be held at a workstation. Sometimes privacy cubes are not available. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• The PulsePoint cannot support a virtual team with people all across the country, nor people that require focused individual tasks and concentration. The level of interruption due to constant chatter, lack of respect for others due to people shouting very loudly on calls, all around constant chatter around the office and breakrooms, noise, illusive task of finding quiet desks, along with the admin task of requesting desks and deep cleaning upon arrival to desk every week is disruptive and time consuming. When people are on conference calls, everyone around them can hear everything causing loss of concentration to individual's work. Then when one is on conference calls, the group can hear everything and everyone talking, chatting in the background. — Associate, More than 10 years

• When I have external client virtual meetings the current set up doesn't work well. The 2-hour limit and restricted same day reservations for an RVP space doesn't work well. There are too many squatters who don't have a reservation or the reservations are a no show. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I have noticed that more people talk on the phone in their cubbies so it is very distracting when I am trying to work or listening to a call. If I do have a client or team call that I am leading, I will either stay at home or try to get a room (which is not always available). I think there should be more phone booths for those situations and maybe offer them to also be reserved. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The cubicles are not setup to be able to take calls, so you have to find an office or a phone booth, which can be difficult. I am on calls 50 to 70% of my day and that is a lot of time in the phone booth. It would be so much better if we could have more office style workstations. Also, I like a standing desk and there are not a lot of options to stand at the PulsePoint and be able to take calls unless you are able to reserve an office, which is very hard to do. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Working from home is more productive and allows me to work more efficiently, without having to deal with the drain of my mental health, physical back pain from the long commute and overall quality of life. In addition, home offices are more inclined for Sales individuals who are on the phone constantly with brokers and client, without having to worry about disturbing our work neighbors at a pulse point. Calls aren't always scheduled in Sales. Many times, you get random phone calls from brokers. At home, you can pick up and start talking. Pulse points, you have to be mindful of those around and put the broker/client on hold to find somewhere to talk. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• One area that could be better supported is maintaining a productive work environment. It can be difficult to concentrate when there is frequent loud conversation and constant phone activity in the surrounding workspace. Additionally, I have noticed that some employees come to work while sick, which can impact the well-being and productivity of the team. — Associate, More than 10 years

• As a people leader with back to back confidential virtual meetings daily I am not supported by my pulse point. I am limited to only 2 hours of a meeting room or Staff VP office, and it is not sustainable or ergonomic to work in n a telephone booth for the entire day. I don't even bother booking desks anymore because it is disruptive to my daily schedule. There is also lack of consistency in director workspaces and equipment (ex webcams). — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 86 (+78 more in HTML/CSV)

• For my role, having an office/cubicle that has a monitor and camera would be extremely helpful. I often have client meetings and scramble to get an area to accommodate my needs. At times all the huddle rooms, office and cubicle rooms are taken. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• You lump all manager/ director titles as though they do the same work. There are people with 'manager/ director' in their title, but have no direct reports. Directors that are people leaders and that are also engaged in 8-10 hours worth of back to back meetings, need an office to support the privacy of their discussion and the fact that the demand and expectation is to be on back to back calls with no breaks, meaning no opportunity to move from space to space. Definitely makes zero sense to sit in a phone booth for 8 hours daily. The set up does not allow what is needed for people leaders to be able to have private and confidential conversations, unless the book space for a short allowance of time. Makes zero sense why Directors of people cannot have an office for a day or book in advance. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• The PulsePoint is fine but when you try to collaborate with a coworker at your desk, people look at you like you are making noise which is uncomfortable. I prefer to call my coworker while I am working from home so I can freely talk and discuss the legal case I am working on. Also, the office can be loud and it is harder to concentrate. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Director equivalents and Directors are currently limited to reserving an office for only two hours per day and can book rooms only on the same day. This limitation reduces effectiveness for roles that involve back■to■back virtual meetings requiring sustained focus.Allowing greater flexibility (3-4 hours) such as longer-duration reservations or advance room booking would improve productivity, enable more effective participation in virtual meetings, and reduce disruption to others in open or shared workspaces. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• I would like to have dedicated units or areas for my team. every time we find a spot together others come in and take our desks. if we are going to be coming in regular like this I would like a dedicated area for our teams. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Cleanliness of desks, set up of desks, ergonomics of seats and desks. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Meetings, scheduled all day long back to back in 30 minute increments that require use of a phone booth or other location not at the cubicle with double monitors. Working from a laptop endlessly in a phone booth is not peak productivity. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I appreciate the open floor plans, however, for those that are required to come in, and only have virtual meetings, all workstations are useless for privacy or the ability to talk out loud. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

POSITIVE · 45 (+37 more in HTML/CSV)

• Reservations: If you’re not going to use your reservation, please cancel it as soon as you know so others can book the desk. Meetings: If you’re hosting a meeting or having an extended discussion, please use a booth or meeting room rather than talking at your desk. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Quiet spaces to be in virtual meetings with dual screens. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Availability of space to support focused work. I have tight deadlines and the office surroundings are are extremely distractive. I work on HEDIS interventions and getting accurate member data to vendors is extremely important. Large group of people all on the same teams meetings in the common work area. People walking around the office on conference calls. Availability of spaces that support discretion. Having to reset my work environment when I'm in the office to support my computer layout Does not have ergonomic keyboards which is a must for me. Desk and keyboards have food left behind on them. I choose to work off my laptop which is not the most productive when you working with large datasets. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Having to change desk so often. It would be helpful to have an assigned desk that we can set to our preference instead of having to change settings, monitors, the mouse, keyboard and fix the chair without it still feeling comfortable. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• The lights are way too bright and the office is too warm. I book a conference room that you can turn the lights down as bright lights hurt my eyes. It's too warm for me as I have an Auto Immune Disease and staying cool is critical to my health. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I am most productive working in a quiet space and find that sitting in the open work desks are highly distracting with the conversations of others. I primarily book VP rooms to ensure high productivity, but they are limited in the duration they can be booked and in how many there are. It would be great to have more, smaller, VP style rooms for those who require quiet spaces. Also, the VP rooms often get warm and there isnt an ability to modify the air settings. A fan in each of these rooms would be helpful. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The Woodland Hills workspace is approximately twice as far the previous Newbury Park location. In addition, the lighting is very bright and has been triggering migraines. Given that I can perform my duties effectively without being onsite, I do not believe in-office attendance is necessary for my role. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Every time I go into the PulsePoint I am at a different cubicle. I try to reserve the same space every time, but it seems like someone is always sitting in the space I reserved. It takes time to find an open cubicle, and to adjust the seat correctly. — Associate, More than 10 years

Amenities & Services (150 total)

NEGATIVE · 46 (+38 more in HTML/CSV)

• The PulsePoint cannot support a virtual team with people all across the country, nor people that require focused individual tasks and concentration. The level of interruption due to constant chatter, lack of respect for others due to people shouting very loudly on calls, all around constant chatter around the office and breakrooms, noise, illusive task of finding quiet desks, along with the admin task of requesting desks and deep cleaning upon arrival to desk every week is disruptive and time consuming. When people are on conference calls, everyone around them can hear everything causing loss of concentration to individual's work. Then when one is on conference calls, the group can hear everything and everyone talking, chatting in the background. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I've been W@H associate since 2012. Mandating associates come into the office is a ridiculous and unnecessary policy. I totally understand the need at times when team(s) want to connect in person. It shouldn't be a mandate that HR has to track who is on the 'naughty' list. My immediate team members all live in different states. 90% of the colleagues I work with on a regular basis also reside in other offices. For associates who come into the office 3 days/week, when oil and gas prices are at all-time high, very short-sited. Associates don't need more activities in the office, we need the flex to decide on our own and with our own managers if we need to be on-site. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Yes, there are many people being very loud with personal conversations. Eating at their desks which is very irritable smell of Indian food. Also, people with no consideration talking loudly at their meetings which others are trying to concentrate and handle our own meeting conversations. Carelon folks should not be combined with Anthem folks. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Proximity to noise. Noise includes conversations picked up by my headset when on Teams calls, socializing/chatter, neighbors continuously cracking sunflower seeds or loudly slurping coffee. — Associate, More than 10 years

• NOISE •PulsePoint Woodland Hills Noise level: AVG 58 dB (using SoundMeter) (vs. home-office: 43 dB) Because the decibel (dB) scale is logarithmic, a 58 dB sound is roughly 32 times more intense and sounds about 3 times louder than a 43 dB sound. •Even noise-cancelling headphones cannot compensate for surrounding conversations and other noise. There should be White-Noise machines in office to drown out distracting office chatter. SMELL •Sometimes other employees wear awful and sickening cologne/aftershave. TEMP •COLD office in winter. I had just gotten over being sick going into office made me relapse. •Instances where sick employees coughing few desks down from me. WORKSTATION •Crowded office. Someone often using my reserved desk. •Workspace monitors often janky required configuration or are not capable of 2K resolution only a 1080P monitor. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Cafeteria area - when there's a hot food pop-up, lines can be very long (especially when there's only one vendor). Associates often have meetings and cannot spend 30 min in a line and then you have to order your food, wait, pay and run back upstairs. Sometimes associates will start lining up beforehand which causes even more problems especially if a vendor(s) are not ready on time. Parking lot (outside) - need clearer signs for Uber/Lyft drivers. Even after I've entered in 'Note to driver' where to pick me up, sometimes cannot find. The 'Anthem' sign is on the top of the building which doesn't help direct drivers where to go. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I work with new National Clients and we discuss things that could be confidential or member issue may arise that needs to be discussed. I do not go into the office for comfort so that is not important to me however, it is too hot for me and I do not want to bring my fan. I have learned to layer and bring a light sweater that can be removed at my desk. I try to avoid the food pop up days and cafe since it is too busy on those days. The cafe food is not great so I bring a lunch and eat at my desk unless one of my co-workers happens to be in the office, we sometimes try to walk to local restaurant. Most of my team is virtual so it is rare that I can connect with them. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Desk ergonomics, keyboard different from what I'm used to, chairs do not have lumber support, equipment is often disconnected, desk or keyboard is dirty and the wipes and hand sanitizer is no longer on every desk. — Associate, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 60 (+52 more in HTML/CSV)

• Participating in employees' sustenance, such as having nutritious food options onsite. — Associate, 6 mos to 24 mos.

• Cleanliness of desks, set up of desks, ergonomics of seats and desks. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Meetings and Events with our outside vendors and counsel that we regularly work with. — Staff VP, 6 mos to 24 mos.

• Better support when items do not work in the office (i.e. keyboards, the screens/monitors), availability of more variety of food to purchase in cafe — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Security screens for blocking sensitive data on monitors. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The lack of bullnose edges on all the desks gets pretty uncomfortable by the end of the day, but overall the PulsePoint is very clean and comfortable. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Although several meeting rooms are available behind closed doors, all are glass boxes. This is why I rated 'discretion' lower. What's happening in the room can be seen by everyone. The emotions people are going through are visible to everyone. These are not places anyone could hide during an active shooter event, either, for which we've been advised to barricade ourselves in a room. — Associate, 2 to 5 years

• PulsePoint could better support employees by providing more adjustable ergonomic workstations within team collaboration areas. Employees should not have to choose between working at a workstation that meets their physical needs and being seated with their team for in-person collaboration. I understand the purpose of requiring employees to badge out of secure areas for emergency accountability. However, because restrooms are outside the secure area, badge records may not always accurately reflect who is physically in the building during an emergency. It may be worthwhile to review whether the current process achieves the intended level of accuracy. — Associate, More than 10 years

POSITIVE · 44 (+36 more in HTML/CSV)

• Since most of my colleagues are spread out across the country, and the few VPs that impact at work are all ensconced in their dedicated offices when they are in the PulsePoint, I still am not interacting/collaborating with colleagues in person, yet my role is Hybrid 2. I sit among a pool of Customer Service and finance staff. While they are very nice, I can't 'collaborate' with them for work. the 23-mile drive in and back in L.A. traffic just adds to extra time in my day and now very expensive gas prices. Whatever benefits I can get from reporting in at a Pulse site can be met in just 1 day per week or as there are team meetings when everyone comes in on the same day. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Availability of space to support focused work. I have tight deadlines and the office surroundings are are extremely distractive. I work on HEDIS interventions and getting accurate member data to vendors is extremely important. Large group of people all on the same teams meetings in the common work area. People walking around the office on conference calls. Availability of spaces that support discretion. Having to reset my work environment when I'm in the office to support my computer layout Does not have ergonomic keyboards which is a must for me. Desk and keyboards have food left behind on them. I choose to work off my laptop which is not the most productive when you working with large datasets. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I like having pods or meeting rooms to go into when I need it, I enjoy the snack area as well — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Please bring back the on site hot meal program. The previous option provided freshly prepared meals with a wider variety of choices, better value and more consistent availability for employees. While the outside vendors are appreciated, the selection is often limited and prices can be difficult for employees to justify on a regular basis. Having hot meals prepared on site offered more flexibility, accommodated different preferences and made it easier for employees to enjoy a convenient meal during the workday. Thank you for considering this feedback. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Housekeeping rules must apply, there is lots of distraction from the cleaning ladys trying to clean our spaces while we are working. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The free coffee, tea and water stations improve my experience. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• The staff working there is friendly and keeps the place running smoothly. Everything is clean. I don't recall every having an issue with cleanliness. — Associate, More than 10 years

• No, the building itself is fine. Could be warmer, but security is kind and friendly, the bathrooms are always clean and the shared areas are clean (like the kitchen/break area). — Associate, More than 10 years

Technology (181 total)

NEGATIVE · 96 (+88 more in HTML/CSV)

• It can get a little noisy in there. The glass telephone booth stations need to have monitors and outlets to allow us to join meetings in there. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Phone booths would be more helpful if there were two monitors within. I project manage and require two screens for this purpose during meetings. I'm in meetings for most of my work day and entirely with people outside of my PulsePoint, thus I find myself to be a distraction to others around me. In addition, when I have a meeting that requires discretion, I'm forced into a phone booth, as the meeting rooms around me are already booked. I have not found an appropriate headset that will allow me to block sound from others to concentrate while also allowing me to speak clearly for others to hear me. The ones I've tried give me migraines. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• There needs to be a separation between people who are working on calls and meetings all day and people like me who do not have calls and meetings all day. It gets pretty noisy at times when teams come in to collaborate- esp if sales or customer services or project management. It is hard to concentrate and can be distracting. — Associate, More than 10 years

• I've been W@H associate since 2012. Mandating associates come into the office is a ridiculous and unnecessary policy. I totally understand the need at times when team(s) want to connect in person. It shouldn't be a mandate that HR has to track who is on the 'naughty' list. My immediate team members all live in different states. 90% of the colleagues I work with on a regular basis also reside in other offices. For associates who come into the office 3 days/week, when oil and gas prices are at all-time high, very short-sited. Associates don't need more activities in the office, we need the flex to decide on our own and with our own managers if we need to be on-site. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Collaboration within your department, not have associates go who do not have teams at pulse point, and just wasting time. — Director or Manager, 6 to 10 years

• I can do my job completely from my home. There really is no reason for me to go into the office. My co-workers communicate via IM or teams if/when needed. — Associate, More than 10 years

• As a people leader with back to back confidential virtual meetings daily I am not supported by my pulse point. I am limited to only 2 hours of a meeting room or Staff VP office, and it is not sustainable or ergonomic to work in n a telephone booth for the entire day. I don't even bother booking desks anymore because it is disruptive to my daily schedule. There is also lack of consistency in director workspaces and equipment (ex webcams). — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Pulse Point has no Wifi so unable to move away for a confidential conversation — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 52 (+44 more in HTML/CSV)

• Having a quieter space/office, knowing equipment is set to preferences w/out having to adjust each time. Equipment is functioning. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• For my role, having an office/cubicle that has a monitor and camera would be extremely helpful. I often have client meetings and scramble to get an area to accommodate my needs. At times all the huddle rooms, office and cubicle rooms are taken. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• Some days I have many phone calls and my personality will not allow me to talk loudly in the bullpen, so I always go into a call box, which is not a comfortable place to be 6 hours out of the day. I try to schedule my calls and presentations (so I have 2 monitors) for days where I am working from home and schedule my focus time for the office, which works far better. The commute also takes away my ability to get online as early to collaborate with my East Coast partners as I am on the West Coast. Prior to COVID we had an office in Thousand Oaks which was a stones throw from my home, if we reopened some of our old offices I think there would be a lot more people reacting positively to return to office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I would like to have dedicated units or areas for my team. every time we find a spot together others come in and take our desks. if we are going to be coming in regular like this I would like a dedicated area for our teams. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Meetings, scheduled all day long back to back in 30 minute increments that require use of a phone booth or other location not at the cubicle with double monitors. Working from a laptop endlessly in a phone booth is not peak productivity. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Better support when items do not work in the office (i.e. keyboards, the screens/monitors), availability of more variety of food to purchase in cafe — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Security screens for blocking sensitive data on monitors. — Associate, More than 10 years

• More rooms that Directors can book for the entire day and not only for 2 hours. Since most of the teams are distributed, I have to be on calls most of the time and have conversations that requires privacy. Having to change location or trying to hunt for rooms to book only for 2 hours is counter productive. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

POSITIVE · 33 (+25 more in HTML/CSV)

• I have always been a virtual before the hybrid directives and both in office and at home is equally productive since my team is spread out and there are not many colleagues to connect with in office. I end up working in an office or booth alone like I would at home. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Quiet spaces to be in virtual meetings with dual screens. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Availability of space to support focused work. I have tight deadlines and the office surroundings are are extremely distractive. I work on HEDIS interventions and getting accurate member data to vendors is extremely important. Large group of people all on the same teams meetings in the common work area. People walking around the office on conference calls. Availability of spaces that support discretion. Having to reset my work environment when I'm in the office to support my computer layout Does not have ergonomic keyboards which is a must for me. Desk and keyboards have food left behind on them. I choose to work off my laptop which is not the most productive when you working with large datasets. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Having to change desk so often. It would be helpful to have an assigned desk that we can set to our preference instead of having to change settings, monitors, the mouse, keyboard and fix the chair without it still feeling comfortable. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• instability of computer equipment like display, mouse or mouse. sometimes it requires unnecessary large amount of time to adjust setup electronically to be able to use. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Carrying my laptop and equipment back and forth each visit. Relocating constantly to find a hush booth/location for active participating on conference calls. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I have some troubles with various desks where monitor setups are different and do not adjust the same for a comfortable viewing experience. I can usually find the desks that work for me though. Overall, I can work well in the existing setup physically, but as a short person, being able to have the keyboard/mouse tray lower than the desktop would help me ergonomically. From an 'ideal' perspective, what I miss with the 'hoteling' desk experience is having to adjust desk setup to work best for me from an ergonomic perspective each time (and not getting it exactly right) and personalization in my workspace. A beautiful and personal workspace helps fuel me during the stress of each day. Not a showstopper, just helpful for me as a person. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I would say that maybe cleanliness could be slightly improved but really all the different teams are making a wonderful experience. — Associate, More than 10 years

Workplace Operations (124 total)

NEGATIVE · 47 (+39 more in HTML/CSV)

• Working from home is more productive and allows me to work more efficiently, without having to deal with the drain of my mental health, physical back pain from the long commute and overall quality of life. In addition, home offices are more inclined for Sales individuals who are on the phone constantly with brokers and client, without having to worry about disturbing our work neighbors at a pulse point. Calls aren't always scheduled in Sales. Many times, you get random phone calls from brokers. At home, you can pick up and start talking. Pulse points, you have to be mindful of those around and put the broker/client on hold to find somewhere to talk. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• I can do my job completely from my home. There really is no reason for me to go into the office. My co-workers communicate via IM or teams if/when needed. — Associate, More than 10 years

• People work from all different areas. My type of job I listen to calls. People talk in the building whether it's on the phone or among themselves and it gets loud and it's hard to concentrate. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Background sounds such as phone discussions, audible computer notifications when associates leave their desk, and informal chats can be disruptive to projects that require concentration and meetings where participants need to speak/be on speaker. Utilizing the soundproof 'phone booths' are an option. But unfortunately it's difficult to navigate large status spreadsheets on the small screens of our laptops we need to bring into the phone booths. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• other associates with no self awareness. Cannot be on a conference call if everyone else is talking too. — Associate, More than 10 years

• It is SOOOO cold! The conference rooms are the worst. But it will be 83 degrees outside and I have to bring a wool sweater and wool socks. When I'm in a conference room that's not even enough. I end up wearing a parka. In addition, the signage is horrible. Hard to find conference rooms and the app to find conference rooms is not great and hard to navigate. Hard to determine where the conference room is, and the signage isn't logical. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Cafeteria area - when there's a hot food pop-up, lines can be very long (especially when there's only one vendor). Associates often have meetings and cannot spend 30 min in a line and then you have to order your food, wait, pay and run back upstairs. Sometimes associates will start lining up beforehand which causes even more problems especially if a vendor(s) are not ready on time. Parking lot (outside) - need clearer signs for Uber/Lyft drivers. Even after I've entered in 'Note to driver' where to pick me up, sometimes cannot find. The 'Anthem' sign is on the top of the building which doesn't help direct drivers where to go. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Having no privacy, moving to a phone booth or conference room for private conversations do not support productive work since I have to work off of my laptop and the furniture is very uncomfortable. Hearing other associates' conversations around me is incredibly distracting and uncomfortable. It is often incredibly cold in the office and difficult to focus and work in those conditions. The only time I reported the facilities, the technician reported quickly but was told he could not fix it or make it any warmer. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 44 (+36 more in HTML/CSV)

• Some days I have many phone calls and my personality will not allow me to talk loudly in the bullpen, so I always go into a call box, which is not a comfortable place to be 6 hours out of the day. I try to schedule my calls and presentations (so I have 2 monitors) for days where I am working from home and schedule my focus time for the office, which works far better. The commute also takes away my ability to get online as early to collaborate with my East Coast partners as I am on the West Coast. Prior to COVID we had an office in Thousand Oaks which was a stones throw from my home, if we reopened some of our old offices I think there would be a lot more people reacting positively to return to office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Commute to Pulsepoint is 22+ miles one way with heavy traffic, in my opinion unhealthy, preferably another Pulsepoint could be located in downtown LA where public transit is available (subway, bus) making commute closer and safer. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• Comfort level is good, although some chairs and outlets are broken. — Associate, More than 10 years

• The layout and the cold. It is always too cold in the building. I have to bring a jacket and a blanket to keep comfortable. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Most of my meeting are across the enterprise and I do not feel comfortable sitting in the booths, and I try not to bother neighbors, so I try to schedule my in-office days on days that are light meeting days but not always possible. Also, I struggle with people disconnecting/removing keyboards, mouses, etc. The help desk is quick to fix the issues but maybe if you can send a reminder to be kind to other people sharing the desk, it is a waste of time to get to the office and have to wait to be able to work on top of the commute. I feel less effective on my office days. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Sometimes the work station that is reserved ahead of time is taken by another associate that does not reserve their workstation and they are offended if they are asked to move. Sometimes connecting to the internet connection or equipment gives issues, causing you to waste time trying to resolve the issue instead of working on tasks you need to do. Having to do private meetings such as 1:1 meetings, requires you to move your things to a confined space to be able to talk freely without others listening. And the most important one is the location of the Pulse Point, there is always LA traffic driving to and from the pulse point, which means you have to calculate the time you need to leave so you are not stuck in hours worth of traffic, time which can be better used if you are working from home. — Director or Manager, 6 to 10 years

• Parking needs validation on a daily basic — Associate, More than 10 years

• Noisy talking, giggling and knocking employees standing in groups close to my desk. I have to remind them when they get too loud. I encourage them to use a huddle or conference room when they communicate while standing around my desk. — Associate, More than 10 years

POSITIVE · 33 (+25 more in HTML/CSV)

• I believe there should be a separate activity for PulsePoint sponsored activities as well as the support provided by our onsite tech support - my PulsePoint has both. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Since most of my colleagues are spread out across the country, and the few VPs that impact at work are all ensconced in their dedicated offices when they are in the PulsePoint, I still am not interacting/collaborating with colleagues in person, yet my role is Hybrid 2. I sit among a pool of Customer Service and finance staff. While they are very nice, I can't 'collaborate' with them for work. the 23-mile drive in and back in L.A. traffic just adds to extra time in my day and now very expensive gas prices. Whatever benefits I can get from reporting in at a Pulse site can be met in just 1 day per week or as there are team meetings when everyone comes in on the same day. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Availability of space to support focused work. I have tight deadlines and the office surroundings are are extremely distractive. I work on HEDIS interventions and getting accurate member data to vendors is extremely important. Large group of people all on the same teams meetings in the common work area. People walking around the office on conference calls. Availability of spaces that support discretion. Having to reset my work environment when I'm in the office to support my computer layout Does not have ergonomic keyboards which is a must for me. Desk and keyboards have food left behind on them. I choose to work off my laptop which is not the most productive when you working with large datasets. — Associate, More than 10 years

• There are few reservable spaces for non-staff VIP level associates that allow low lighting (overhead lighting is way too much in the office. Especially when there is so much natural light that could be used. My work requires me to look and discuss PHI as well as competitively sensitive information. It is not appropriate to have these conversations or meetings in a cube space where I do not know who is listening. While I am able to reserve a VIP office for 2 hours that does not allow me to accomplish a full day of meetings. There are some small individual phone booths, but they do not allow large screens for presentations or working with data. Additionally, these are not reservable and if I am driving an hour to the office I would like to know that when I get there I will have a space to accommodate my workday needs. — Associate, 2 to 5 years

• I feel that the open space work environment is very loud, even though I sit in the director's sections on the 3rd floor. I'm very short and would love to have an adjustable desk in directors' section that would allow for standing and sitting. The lighting is very bright, and the building is kept a very cool temp. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Its not the PulsePoint directly, the Pulse Point is very nice. Its the nature of the department. The associates within my team work across all California, therefore, we are not able to meet at the same Pulse Point for meetings or collaboration. I drive to the office once a week to be alone when I could have worked at home and saved the time and gas of the commute. — Associate, More than 10 years

• No, the building itself is fine. Could be warmer, but security is kind and friendly, the bathrooms are always clean and the shared areas are clean (like the kitchen/break area). — Associate, More than 10 years

• Once I get to Woodland Hills the experience is good. It is a long commute in terms of time however and with the price of fuel in California it's become quite painful. — Associate, More than 10 years

Policy / Experience (140 total)

NEGATIVE · 41 (+33 more in HTML/CSV)

• I've been W@H associate since 2012. Mandating associates come into the office is a ridiculous and unnecessary policy. I totally understand the need at times when team(s) want to connect in person. It shouldn't be a mandate that HR has to track who is on the 'naughty' list. My immediate team members all live in different states. 90% of the colleagues I work with on a regular basis also reside in other offices. For associates who come into the office 3 days/week, when oil and gas prices are at all-time high, very short-sited. Associates don't need more activities in the office, we need the flex to decide on our own and with our own managers if we need to be on-site. — Associate, More than 10 years

• Some desks are missing essential equipment (e.g., a second monitor, power cord, keyboard, or mouse). Although I was told desks are checked weekly, I had to change desks for four weeks due to a missing power connection. Additionally, about twice a month I experience connectivity issues that require multiple laptop restarts, which is inefficient and frustrating. I am more productive when working from home. — Associate, More than 10 years

• NOISE •PulsePoint Woodland Hills Noise level: AVG 58 dB (using SoundMeter) (vs. home-office: 43 dB) Because the decibel (dB) scale is logarithmic, a 58 dB sound is roughly 32 times more intense and sounds about 3 times louder than a 43 dB sound. •Even noise-cancelling headphones cannot compensate for surrounding conversations and other noise. There should be White-Noise machines in office to drown out distracting office chatter. SMELL •Sometimes other employees wear awful and sickening cologne/aftershave. TEMP •COLD office in winter. I had just gotten over being sick going into office made me relapse. •Instances where sick employees coughing few desks down from me. WORKSTATION •Crowded office. Someone often using my reserved desk. •Workspace monitors often janky required configuration or are not capable of 2K resolution only a 1080P monitor. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

• It is SOOOO cold! The conference rooms are the worst. But it will be 83 degrees outside and I have to bring a wool sweater and wool socks. When I'm in a conference room that's not even enough. I end up wearing a parka. In addition, the signage is horrible. Hard to find conference rooms and the app to find conference rooms is not great and hard to navigate. Hard to determine where the conference room is, and the signage isn't logical. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• No ability to regulate temperature or lighting in offices, not enough offices. — Staff VP, More than 10 years

• I am a director with 29 people under me, four of whom are directors themselves. I have meetings all day, most of which have some level of confidentiality to them. Most positions at my level (M16) are titled as 'Staff VP.' For whatever reason, mine is titled 'Director III.' The lack of having those words in my title make it so that 1) I can't reserve offices until the day of and 2) I can only reserve offices for at most 2 hours. I'm also required to work in the office 3 days per week. How am I expected to hold three days' worth of confidential meetings in 6 hours (two hours per day)? There should be a way to get some 'directors,' especially those at the M16 level who have directors reporting to them, an exception to be able to reserve offices the same way their peers, who happen to have Staff VP in their title, can. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• 1. Each of the desks are set up slightly differently (e.g. the way the monitors are situated). I find it very frustrating when the dual monitors do not align properly and it can take me 15-20 minutes just to get set up. I can't seem to get the chair and desk aligned in a way that is comfortable. 2. There are loud conversations happening around me, both on the phone and within the workspace, that are very distracting to me. I bring earbuds to drown out the sound, but often I can still hear it. On my last office visit, a manager was on a call with their associate and was giving a negative review of the associate's performance - I felt that call shouldn't have been done in an open space where others can hear. 3. The office gets too hot for me midday, where I am sweating and too uncomfortable to stay any longer. — Associate, More than 10 years

• 1. It is extremely difficult to concentrate on my work when in the office because of other associates talking. 2. I often have difficulty getting the monitor, keyboard, or mouse to work. Often I find a previous associate using the desk has unplugged something. The IT team is awesome at helping out but it is such a waste of time to try to set up the work station then wait for IT to come help. 3. Driving into the office to work, when everyone I collaborate with is in other states, is unproductive, frustrating, and a waste of time. — Associate, More than 10 years

NEUTRAL / MIXED · 43 (+35 more in HTML/CSV)

• Some days I have many phone calls and my personality will not allow me to talk loudly in the bullpen, so I always go into a call box, which is not a comfortable place to be 6 hours out of the day. I try to schedule my calls and presentations (so I have 2 monitors) for days where I am working from home and schedule my focus time for the office, which works far better. The commute also takes away my ability to get online as early to collaborate with my East Coast partners as I am on the West Coast. Prior to COVID we had an office in Thousand Oaks which was a stones throw from my home, if we reopened some of our old offices I think there would be a lot more people reacting positively to return to office. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• Would love to see more people at work and do activities together — Associate, More than 10 years

• I do believe there needs to be more options to allow focused work and discretion. On busy days in the office, the pods are usually occupied, as well as the smaller meeting rooms. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I appreciate the open floor plans, however, for those that are required to come in, and only have virtual meetings, all workstations are useless for privacy or the ability to talk out loud. — Director or Manager, 2 to 5 years

• Pulsepoint at woodland hills offers lot of support for hybrid resource like me. Currently all cubical are very close to each other where our client can hear background conversations or calls while during external Client or vendor call. If we can go back to cubes like third floor , it would help people on second floor. I mostly work from third floor because I don't want the client to hear background noise. This is my only concern. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

• I need more space / areas to have sensitive conversations. Especially as a people leader. How people that are NOT a people manager nor at director or above level can have an office all day, but I cannot is frustrating. — Director or Manager, 6 to 10 years

• the temperature in the office can be so cold. if can find the happy medium not too cold and hot would be great — Associate, More than 10 years

• More small conference rooms and work capsules are needed to support heavy on-site meeting and call demands. Directors are on-site three days per week and are in calls most of the day, which can still be disruptive in open areas. Leaders need capsules (not phone booths) and small rooms for 2+ hours daily for team and cross-functional collaboration. Supporting the Health Plan President is challenging due to limited offices with tables/chairs - only 255-B corner office has this setup - it would be nice to add it to all Staff VP offices. Large CA Health Plan meetings (3/month, 14–25 attendees) often face space constraints more large-room options are needed beyond the single 1st-floor room. — Associate, 2 to 5 years

POSITIVE · 56 (+48 more in HTML/CSV)

- I am on calls (meetings) 85-90% of my day. There are not a lot of areas to sit when talking that much. I've been in a huddle room with my boss, and we were on the same call (meeting). the door was touching but not closed all the way and someone came up and closed it completely. I know it can be bothersome when someone talks a lot. When in cubes trying to work and people come down the aisle and are talking or even stop and talk that is sometimes hard to deal with. Especially when your very focused and trying to concentrate. I work with member data and often have PHI up on my screen, so I have to be very careful of what can be seen. I do love the phone booths, but I don't want to spend the whole day in there. — Associate, More than 10 years

- I have always been a virtual before the hybrid directives and both in office and at home is equally productive since my team is spread out and there are not many colleagues to connect with in office. I end up working in an office or booth alone like I would at home. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

- Not really as my work is collaboration with remote colleagues and not something that can be better supported by my PulsePoint. — Associate, More than 10 years

- Since most of my colleagues are spread out across the country, and the few VPs that impact at work are all ensconced in their dedicated offices when they are in the PulsePoint, I still am not interacting/collaborating with colleagues in person, yet my role is Hybrid 2. I sit among a pool of Customer Service and finance staff. While they are very nice, I can't 'collaborate' with them for work. the 23-mile drive in and back in L.A. traffic just adds to extra time in my day and now very expensive gas prices. Whatever benefits I can get from reporting in at a Pulse site can be met in just 1 day per week or as there are team meetings when everyone comes in on the same day. — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

- In my view, PulsePoint is meeting my expectations. I enjoy coming into the PulsePoint office and appreciate the positive work environment it provides. — Associate, 6 to 10 years

- This Pulse Point is a great workplace to work. I wouldn't change anything for my work. — Associate, More than 10 years

- I like having pods or meeting rooms to go into when I need it, I enjoy the snack area as well — Director or Manager, More than 10 years

- I am most productive working in a quiet space and find that sitting in the open work desks are highly distracting with the conversations of others. I primarily book VP rooms to ensure high productivity, but they are limited in the duration they can be booked and in how many there are. It would be great to have more, smaller, VP style rooms for those who require quiet spaces. Also, the VP rooms often get warm and there isnt an ability to modify the air settings. A fan in each of these rooms would be helpful. — Associate, More than 10 years

Data source & method. Built from the PulsePoint survey export · completed responses only · 10 in-scope sites. Support responses map to a 0–100 scale; each dimension is the average of its items; the Overall PulsePoint Experience Index Score is the unweighted average of the four Dimension Scores — the same calculation as the Tableau deck. Friction & RYG per the official Tableau spec · Priority = 40% volume + 35% share negative + 25% Friction.